We Are Meeting At Prime Time This Week!

June 6, 2018

1979 My First Real Job

In the fall of 1979, I reported to Neil Armstrong Junior High School to start my career as a teacher. Earlier in the summer, there had been a Welcome Bar-B -Que at the principal's house. I met the administrative team, I met other department teachers, I met my department head and I met the other new teachers. This would be easy. I was ready.

After a week of in-service, I was not sure. As I walked in that day, I was blown away with all that had to be done. We came into the cafeteria and found our names on the chairs at the head of rows of other chairs; these would be where our first period students would be sitting. This was our Homeroom. I would meet with these students every day, first period. There were 7th, 8th and 9th graders in this class. As a 7th grader you would stay in this class for three years.

I was extremely fortunate to be there. The wonderful teachers that I taught with served as daily role models. I was invited to dances, encouraged to coach and I was given some of the best advice concerning my Master's Degree. You will be inundated with numerous conferences that will make you a better teacher. Do not go to any of them until you have earned your Master's Degree. Although these conferences might be enjoyable and worthwhile, they might not fill the requirements for a degree. These are extras to do after you have your Master's Degree. While teaching there, I coached 9th grade football and 9th grade basketball.

The four years spent at Neil Armstrong were extremely beneficial. These years prepared me to push myself in different directions. At the end of four years, I left for Tom McCall Middle School. This move after four years convinced me, that in order to do my best, I should try new things, keep fresh.

When I look back on my career, I taught at four different school models; Junior High, Middle School, Upper Elementary and High School. Social Studies Classes that I taught included; 6th Social Studies, 7th Geography, 8th American History, 9th Honors Social Studies, Global Studies, World Studies, American Studies, American History, American History in the 20th Century, Modern Problems, American Government and Advanced Placement American Government. Other classes that I taught were 7th Reading, 8th Physical Education, 9th English, 10th Work Study, High School Leadership and at 6th Grade, I taught all other disciplines. In addition to these classes I taught, I also served as the Tom McCall Middle School Athletic Director and the Forest Grove High School Activities Director. Life will get stale if you do not shake it up a bit.
